Jack and Carla love to run outside and play hide and seek on their grandparents' farm. One day, their cousins came over and played alongside them. While one of their cousins was doing a countdown for everyone to hide, Jack hid next to a huge old pecan tree. Jack did not realize that he was standing just above an anthill. Before his cousin could finish counting down from twenty, everyone heard Jack scream. When they finally saw what happened Jack's socks were covered with fire ants. Everyone tried to help him get his socks off and knock off the ants. Jack's grandmother came outside to see what the commotion was and was shocked to see that Jack had stepped into an anthill.

They had been warned about anthills since they were little. Jack seemed to be in a lot of pain and had a difficult time walking. His grandmother made sure they were no more ants on his body. She then had him soak his legs and feet a special solution. While Jack was soaking his feet, his grandmother also gave him some medicine for the pain. She also reminded the grandchildren to pay close attention to where they played. The next day, Jack felt better, but his feet were still slightly swollen. Jack, Carla, and their cousins stayed inside and played board games.
